BASIS FOR DETERMINING THE CONSIDERATION FOR THE CAPITAL INCREASE

The Transaction involves the valuation of the net assets of Hunan Petrochemical and the valuation of the assets used for capital contribution of Sinopec Corp. Changling Branch, the Assets Company Baling Branch and the Assets Company Changling Branch. China United Appraisal, a valuation institution that has completed the filing for the securities services business, issued asset valuation reports as at the Valuation Date of 30 April 2023 respectively, and the valuation results by the asset-based method were adopted as the final valuation conclusions.

The assets that contributed to the aforesaid high appreciation rate were mainly land use right assets. The appreciation was mainly due to the fact that the land use rights were acquired at an early stage and were recorded at a low original acquisition cost, thus the book value was low, and the price of the land use rights in the Changling area has risen significantly, resulting in a high appreciation in value.

Significant Valuation Assumptions and Valuation Parameters

Valuation Assumptions : In addition to the general assumptions such as the transaction assumption, open market assumption and asset going concern assumption, the valuation of the Capital Contribution Assets in the Transaction also adopted the special assumptions, among others: that there would be no significant changes in the prevailing national policies on macro-economics, finance, industry and taxation, that the valuation target would continue to be in operation in the future, and that each of the valuation target would be based on the existing assets as at the Valuation Date and that the prevailing market price would be based on the effective prices prevailing in the domestic market as at the Valuation Date.

Valuation Parameters : The key valuation parameters involved in the valuation of the Capital Contribution Assets in the Transaction are set out below:

(1) Land use right assets

The valuation of the land use right assets included in the valuation scope was mainly conducted by using the benchmark land price coefficient correction method (). The benchmark land price coefficient correction method utilises the results of the benchmark land price and its land price correction system for cities and towns, in accordance with the principle of substitution, compares the regional and individual conditions of the valuation target with the conditions of the publicly announced land price, and then obtains the value of the valuation target as at the Valuation Date through correction.

Calculation formula:

$$P = P_o \times 1 \times K_i \times K_v \times K_n \times K_t \times K_p \times K_s \times K_f$$

In the formula:

P_o - benchmark land price of the applicable grade ()

K_i - the sum of the corrected values of the factors in the table of correction coefficients for the regional factors of the land parcels ()

K_v - plot ratio correction coefficient ()

K_n - term correction coefficient ()

K_t - correction coefficient on the date of valuation ()

K_p - correction coefficient for location deviation of land parcels ()

K_s - correction coefficient for topography and area of land parcels ()

K_f - correction value for development degree ()

(2) Housing and building assets

The valuation of the housing and building assets included in the valuation scope was mainly conducted by using the replacement cost method. The replacement cost
